

Helpful money information

- Patients have told us they are passionate about:
 - Getting on top of debts
 - Setting up a regular transplant savings plan
 - Challenging themselves to get best value out of everything
- Often patients find themselves in changed financial circumstances due to their ill health, but new ways of managing can be found.
- Transplantation for Australian Medicare Card Holders is publicly funded in Australia. Australian residents do not pay for the organ donation, transplantation, admission, in-patient and outpatient clinics in Queensland public hospitals. PAH patients with private health insurance can choose to declare their private health cover, enabling the PAH to obtain some payment for costs from the private health funds.

- The Transplant Service social workers can with the patient's permission, provide a letter to the loan lender confirming the patient's circumstances and/or refer the patient or family for support with debt management. Repayment plans or a temporary payment hold can often be handled quickly, confidentially and sensitively.

Centerlink

Income support is available to eligible Australians through Centrelink – the Federal Government income support agency. Decisions regarding Centrelink payments are made within context of government policy and legislation.

Centrelink - Services Australia

The nearest Centrelink office to the Princess Alexandra Hospital is at Stones Corner on the corner of Logan Road and Cornwall Street, 5 minutes by car. For public transport to Stones Corner Centrelink visit TransLink www.translink.com.au

- There is no “transplant” payment made to pre or post-transplant patients. However, any patient or carer whose income is affected by their medical situation, is advised to make contact with Centrelink office either in person, phone or online. If a patient is applying for a Centrelink payment, they need to tell Centrelink of “Intent to Claim” – and register their intention that an application is underway. Once registered, Centrelink will make contact.

Centrelink online account help - Claim a payment online - Services Australia

www.servicesaustralia.gov.au/individuals/online-help/centrelink/claim-payment-online

- Having debt and debt repayments, is not a criteria for Centrelink payments.
- Centrelink can tell you about the different types of payment and their application processes. Household income and assets are assessed, along with the patient’s medical condition. Applicants experiencing ill health usually start with Job Seeker with medical exemption. A Centrelink Medical Certificate needs to be provided and renewed on a regular basis and each Certificate can only be for up to 12 weeks.

Superannuation, insurance and disability payments

- Patients are urged to look into their eligibility for disability support or early release payments through their Superannuation policies. Many factors are assessed including age, work-type, the impact of illness, long-term medical outcomes and their likelihood of return to their current or any other employment. Patients should check all their policies.
